ELECTROLYSIS HAIR REMOVAL

Electrolysis is an FDA and British Medical Association approved method of permanent hair removal. It is particularly suitable for small body areas like upper lip and chin. It is very successfully used on all skin types and all hair colours (including white, red, and blonde) and all hair thickness, including ladies that have started menopause and wish to permanently remove hair. It is performed by a fully qualified and experienced technician.

Electrolysis hair removal requires hair to be treated individually. A tiny probe, the size of the hair, is inserted in the hair follicle. A small amount of current is then realised which stops the nutrients and blood supply to the hair causing the hair to die. The number of treatments required varies from person to person; it is not possible to determine in advance how many treatments will be required. The number of hairs on a treated area can vary for each individual but you will see the difference just after just a few treatments. Treatment progress depends on skin sensitivity, moisture in the skin, hair thickness, your commitment etc. A treatment plan is discussed at the consultation after examining the area to be treated.

Immediately after the treatment there may be some redness and swelling on the area treated, which usually disappears in time depending on each person's sensitivity of the skin.

If you are looking to permanently remove hair, maybe have hair that does not respond to laser or have unsuccessfully tried various forms of hair removal, please call us to book your electrolysis consultation. In your consultation your suitability will be discussed, and your questions can be answered in more detail.
